Good day,

I have read in the Sunday Telegraph that APHRA is taking adverse action against a Doctor for tweeting his personal opinion that does not agree with the opinion of APHRA. Australia is understandably proud of its reputation of allowing free speech and discussion of controversial subjects. It would appear APHRA is attempting to take that right away from Australian citizens that happen to be medical practitioners. If this information published in the Sunday Telegraph is indeed correct, I strongly disagree with the stance being taken by APHRA and hope the Board will be reconsidering its position.

Yours sincerely
