To whom it may concern,

I write with concerns about proposed changes to the code of practice regarding the limitation of free speech for doctors. The code should not dictate what a doctor must believe or say, and I disagree with the premise that there are 'generally accepted views'. Topics like abortion and euthanasia are controversial precisely because there is no one 'generally accepted view', and doctors, as people on the front line of the issues, should be guaranteed their right to hold an opinion and talk about it.

Kind regards,
